Author: Lev Neymotin — personal position and prediction

Executive Summary

This paper presents a single, coherent scenario in which the CIA plays a decisive, behind-the-scenes role in achieving a peace agreement in the Russia–Ukraine war. Building on the momentum of the Gaza peace framework, the U.S. administration—through intelligence coordination, strategic timing, and controlled political pressure—prepares a Peace Plan designed to bring the conflict to a close.

The plan relies on two synchronized tracks:

1. Public and military pressure on Russia, through expanded sanctions, economic leverage, and the potential use of long-range U.S. missile systems supplied to Ukraine.
2. Private pressure on Ukraine, using an intelligence-prepared dossier exposing corruption within President Zelensky's circle, presented confidentially before the Washington meeting on Friday, October 17, 2025.

This dual approach aims to compel both sides to accept a pragmatic settlement: Kyiv agreeing to territorial and political concessions, and Moscow to halt escalation under credible U.S. and international guarantees. The author predicts that October 17, 2025, will become a landmark date for ending the war—comparable in historical resonance to September 29, the day the Gaza peace framework was forged.

1. Foundations of the Theory

1. The CIA's silence in the public domain is an indicator of intense covert activity—precisely its intended operational mode.
2. The Gaza peace agreement demonstrated that coordinated intelligence, diplomacy, and timing can deliver tangible results.
3. The next target of that momentum is the Russia–Ukraine conflict, with the U.S. acting as the catalyst.
4. Zelensky's vulnerabilities, including credible corruption allegations involving energy deals and political payoffs, provide potential leverage if presented formally and discreetly.
5. Plausible deniability shields such an operation legally and politically—since the information, once corroborated, is factual, not fabricated.
6. The global reward—ending a war threatening Europe and the world economy—justifies the risk of using such leverage, especially if it leads to a just and enforceable peace.

2. Sequence of Events Leading to the Peace Plan

Point 1.

A series of press leaks referencing Zelensky's corruption ties to the Biden-era Ukrainian energy sector (Burisma, prosecutor dismissals, payments, etc.) sets the informational background. Objective: create a public foundation for a credible dossier.

Point 2.

A meeting between President Trump and President Zelensky is scheduled well in advance for Friday, October 17, 2025, coinciding with the post-Gaza diplomatic momentum. The administration seeks to replicate the success of one peace initiative with another—shifting global focus from the Middle East to Eastern Europe.

Point 3.

The CIA prepares and delivers the corruption dossier to Zelensky prior to the meeting. It is presented as evidence of accountability—truthful, not fabricated—serving as political leverage to guide Zelensky toward acceptance of the upcoming peace terms.

Point 4.

Simultaneously, the Administration finalizes and presents the U.S.-sponsored Peace Plan, outlining the structure of a ceasefire and settlement. Its principal terms include:

- Ukraine's recognition of the post-2014 reality in Crimea.
- Negotiation over some eastern border regions with localized referenda or international monitoring.
- Formal neutrality or withdrawal of NATO accession goals, replaced by a U.S.-backed security framework and international guarantees.
- Phased economic and military aid, contingent on verified compliance.

Point 5.

While the U.S. continues to pressure Russia through military readiness and the threat of advanced weapons, it also signals—privately—that America's ultimate goal is stabilization, not escalation. The credible possibility of long-range missiles reaching Moscow serves as both deterrent and negotiating leverage.

Point 6.

The October 17 meeting is expected to be the operational climax. Zelensky arrives in Washington fully aware of the stakes—both personal and political. The U.S. presents the Peace Plan as a “take-it-or-lose-momentum” opportunity: a controlled end to the war with guarantees, versus continued destruction and potential loss of Western unity.

3. The Peace Plan as the Central Instrument

The Peace Plan is the tangible result of coordinated intelligence, diplomacy, and coercive persuasion. It contains:

1. Political clauses — recognition of current territorial control lines and establishment of mechanisms for dispute resolution through internationally supervised referenda or demilitarized zones.
2. Military clauses — immediate cessation of offensive operations, withdrawal of heavy weapons under monitoring, and mutual restraint in the use of long-range systems.
3. Economic clauses — phased lifting of select sanctions, reconstruction funds under U.S./EU oversight, and reopening of regional trade corridors.
4. Security framework — U.S.-backed guarantee of Ukraine's independence within defined borders, supported by a neutral, treaty-based defense pact outside of NATO.

The Peace Plan is to be introduced in private, refined through back channels, and potentially announced within days if both parties align on essentials.

4. Predicted Outcome

1. October 17, 2025, will be a breakthrough date. Either the full Peace Plan or a publicly declared “Framework Agreement” will emerge from Washington.
2. Ukraine will accept the framework under direct CIA-mediated pressure, seeing the dossier as a personal and political ultimatum balanced by generous Western guarantees.
3. Russia will respond favorably, not out of trust but pragmatism—viewing the Peace Plan as validation of its territorial position and as a chance to secure relief from economic isolation.

4. Trump's Administration will present the outcome as a historic act of realpolitik, portraying the CIA's success in orchestrating dual peace achievements—Gaza and Ukraine—as proof of restored U.S. strategic dominance.

5. Predicted Global Impact

- Immediate de-escalation of military activity in Ukraine, followed by gradual normalization of trade and energy stability across Europe.
- Restructuring of alliances: the U.S. regains credibility as the world's chief peace negotiator; Russia secures stability; Ukraine preserves sovereignty under new terms.
- Political dividends for the Trump Administration ahead of 2026, establishing a legacy of ending two major conflicts within one presidency.

Conclusion

This position paper presents the author's unified vision: the CIA's quiet but decisive orchestration of a Peace Plan that forces pragmatic resolution through calibrated leverage, truthful exposure, and timing. The expected sequence—leaks, dossier, and Peace Plan presentation culminating in the October 17, 2025 summit—is designed to produce results similar in speed and impact to the September 29 Gaza accord. The operation relies on realism over ideology, intelligence over publicity, and the understanding that sometimes, controlled exposure and pressure can accelerate peace where diplomacy alone has failed.

Prediction:

October 17, 2025, will be remembered as the day when U.S.-led intelligence and diplomacy brought the Russia-Ukraine war to its turning point—transforming a battlefield stalemate into a verifiable, enforceable Peace Plan.
